Community enjoys successful weekend at Old Time Days

Lemon Grove Old Time Days was a fun-filled weekend for all, giving members of the community the opportunity to meet, relax and enjoy the hometown spirit of Lemon Grove. Community groups and organizations had a chance to be recognized during the Old Time Days Parade and to raise a little money afterwards at food and entertainment booths, which were supported by the large crowds who came for the parade and stayed for the fun.

The parade stepped off at eleven with a banner, carried by children from various scouting troops whose relatives served in the Gulf, welcoming home the troops of Desert Storm. Local community groups marched out in grand style and the crowd cheered for local entries including; City Council members and their families waving from convertibles, Miss Lemon Grove Dancia Yacuzzo, the Lemon Grove Little League, Sherry's Gotta Dance Drill Team, the Boy Scouts, the Girl Scouts, the Pelican Pub Pirate Ship, "Elizabeth (the mobile) Lemon", Dolly the Clown, the Lemon Grove Middle School Band, the Mt. Miguel Marching Matadors and Helix Highlanders Marching Band.

Old Time Days activities began Friday with the Chamber of Commerce Costume Contest. First-Place winner was Bernadine's Hair World, with the salon transformed into "Olson's Mercantile." Second-place winner for the second year in a row, was Lemon Grove Pawnbroker, and third place was Bank of America.

Friday night's dance and barbecue were a great success. The Firefighters served approximately 500 meals and, said Firefighter Nancy Shuster, long lines are a thing of the past. "Eliminating the pre-sale tickets really helped," she said. "We were able to predict how much food we needed and kept serving meals right up until eight o'clock."

The Kiwanis Pancake Breakfast served in excess of 850 hungry people on Saturday, about 200 more than last year, said Kiwanis President Bob Burns. "This year was one of our best," he added, "everybody was just tremendously happy with it and it was a real community effort. We're tremendously proud."

Game booths, food booths and craft stalls were all well visited Friday and Saturday. Of special interest to kids and adults alike, were the roaming clowns creating balloon animals, a dunking booth and an air-filled castle for the kids to jump in. The llama rides were a big hit and looked spectacular weaving their way through the crowds with excited children on their backs.

The Friends of the Lemon Grove Library set a personal record last weekend, "We raised $584 from the booksale," said Tracy Brooks, Friends of the Lemon Grove Library President. "We had an awfully good selection this year and there weren't a lot of books left."

City makes change in administrative structure

The City of Lemon Grove is going through some organizational changes, losing employees and creating new positions.

The need for these changes started when Ann Moore, Assistant to the City Manager, left and Finance Director/City Clerk Karen Huff also decided to leave for the tropical pastures of Hawaii.

City Staff took a long look at the organization of the City and recommended the position of Finance Director/City Clerk be eliminated and replaced with the position of Administrative Services Director. The City Manager would then take on some of the functions of City Clerk.

A new position, City Council Services Clerk, is to be created within the City Managers Office and this position would involve taking the City Council Minutes, noticing public hearings and other ministerial duties formerly performed by the City Clerk.

The two positions of Assistant to the City Manager would also be a thing of the past. Another new position, Assistant City Manager, would take their place, as well as replace the Community Development Director as the Deputy Director of the Redevelopment Agency.

This plan will create approximately $68,000 in savings.

City Manager Jack Shelver said he hopes to fill the new positions with existing employees so no current employees lose their jobs because of the reorganization.

Personal comments of Councilman Bob Burns

This year's Armed Forces day will be especially important in that it will welcome back the Desert Storm heroes as well as show appreciation for all the veterans of other conflicts. This day always stirs the breast of us old-timers and invariably someone says, "Can you still get into your old uniform?" Here is a personal anecdote on that subject.

Some years ago, the County declared a large office building on Pacific Highway as surplus. It was ruled that it would be torn down and a parking lot would take its place. The building was once the most important edifice in San Diego, to the sailors and marines who were stationed here. It was then called the Pacific Square Ballroom and the USO brought in the "second-nicest" girls in the world for us to dance with. The "nicest" were, of course, those girls back home. We heard Glenn Miller, Artie Shaw, the Dorseys, and on and on into musical "heaven." It was decided that the temporary partitions would be taken out and that there would be that one "last dance" at the Pacific Square before it was gone forever. The word went out that everyone should try to "come as they were" in the early '40s, if at all possible.

Digging into my old seabag, I found a dress jumper, complete with old-style rate and ruptured duck discharge emblem still sewn in place. There was also a set of un-dress blues that were of the same heavy wool serge that the uniforms were made of in those days. These I took to a nice old tailor who had a shop in Newberry's basement, and a nice lady named Shirley took my measurements. I told them that I just wanted the jumper fitted with a triangle of the other material to accommodate my increased girth. Also, I thought they could add the same to the trousers to last through an evening of my "Grand Rapids High School" version of the jitterbug. Saul, the tailor, threw up his hands and said, "Leave it to me, Dr. Burns." I did, and went home to warn my wife what I had done so she would have ample time to leave me if she wanted to do so. She was thrilled about the dance, but said she might disdain knowing me in public.

Weeks later, they called to say the uniform was ready. "How much," I asked. He said, "eighty-five dollars." I gasped, and asked, "What did you have to do?"

"I did it right," he answered. Shirley handed me the uniform and pointed out that he had completely reworked the jumper. It was enlarged around the middle with a zipper up the side the way the "tailor-mades" were done in the old days. I marveled at how they had changed the waist from a 30 to a 42. This was the tricky part. The government-issue trousers, "bell bottoms," has a traditional 13 buttons in the front to commemorate the 13 original colonies, I guess. My uniform was traditional in every way except one - instead of the usual 13 buttons, I now had 17. It did fit like a glove and felt exactly the same as in 1943 when I danced to Glenn Miller at the Pacific Square, except that this time I had a different (and best of all) girl in my arms.

Some were able to wear old uniforms, and there were even some "Zoot Suits." The old Glenn Miller Orchestra, under the direction of Tex Benecke, played the same wonderful music. Afterward, we tried to bring pressure to bear to save the ballroom, but we were "bureaucratized" into submission, probably by rock music fans.

It does me little good to have an old uniform that will fit if no one else does. Saul and Shirley are gone, so I am going to have to be content with just wearing my blue flat top hat and leave my 17-button bell bottoms in mothballs. My permission letter from then-Secretary of the Navy, Lehman, probably is not still valid, anyway.

Commentary

by Paul Treske

Within the next month or so, high schools and colleges will be holding graduation, sending the Class of '91 "out into the real world." Each year, it is the custom of those who comment on such things to compare the hopefulness of the eager, new graduates with the grim reality of the world they are entering. But, seldom, in recent years has a class graduated into a nation and a world with quite so many troubles and with quite so dim prospects.

Our world has become almost surreal in its anguish and seemingly unresolvable problems. The brutal decimation of the Kurds following the end of the Gulf war is still going on, but has been superceded by the unfathomable natural disaster in Bangladesh. While we stare dumbstruck at over 200,000 human beings having been washed away by cyclones and floods, we are vaguely aware that millions in Africa are still starving to death with no real end in sight.

Meanwhile, an item in one of the local dailies tells us graphically that Nazi youth are on the steady rise in Germany and a new generation of adoration of Hitler and his butchers is growing. Of course, we don't have to go that far to find hate crimes on the rise. For whenever things get a little edgy, the haters always find their scapegoats.

On a real "practical" plane, the employment picture for the Class of '91 is not encouraging. Overall, unemployment is rising and both colleges and high schools report that the usual flood of corporate and business recruiters that shows up on campuses each spring is down to a trickle. Of course, there are usually jobs available in the so-called "service" areas, but these are frequently low-paying and dead-ended in terms of growth.

For those remaining on campus for another year, things are hardly better. The California budget crisis has fallen hardest on education and health, and schools are faced with severe cuts in faculty and classes. Students and faculty at SDSU may march and chant, but the plain fact is, the money isn't there.

So, what of the Class of '91? It would seem that it could well accelerate the current trend of succeeding generations now earning less than their parents. That is cold comfort to go with the cap and gown. The only thing that can, perhaps, be offered then, is the challenge to turn some small part of the world into a more palatable place to exist. It is not a challenge toward material success and the comfort of "the good things," but other American generations have faced similar trials and somehow worked successfully enough to ensure their children the material things of life.

Since the '70s, we have had a sense of graduating classes that seemed guaranteed quick and solid success. It would seem that the Class of '91 will have to fight hard to accomplish its goals. We wish them well. They will need all of our hopes and prayers.

From Where I Sit

by Frank Andrews

I worked for my father, Frank Sr., when I was young and learning the paperhanging trade. Our jobs took us to some very unusual places to hang wallpaper. A job to remember was the day we hung paper in the chapel of a small mortuary in Minneapolis.

Dad would start work at 7 a.m., which always seemed way too early for this Frankie. He insisted that the most and best work was always done before lunch. We pulled up in front of the funeral parlor and Dad ordered me, "Frankie, go ring the bell to get someone to let us in."

I rang the bell and waited until a young man came down from his apartment upstairs to open up. He introduced himself as Ted, the mortician, and then showed us the chapel to be papered, as well as where to set up the papering table.

"Hey Ted, where can we get some clean water to make paste?" asked my Pop.

Ted answered, "Go through that door and down the hall to the workroom, in the back. You'll find a sink and all the water you want." He then announced, "I'm going upstairs for breakfast and will be back down in a little while."

"You set up the papering table while I get the water," Dad ordered abruptly as he grabbed the big empty paste bucket and hurried down the hall. He returned in just a few minutes with an empty bucket and looking a little pale under the collar, even with a little touch of green. He said in a more gentle way, "Frankie, you go get the water, I can't find the darn sink." Dad seemed a little shaky, so I said kind'a smartly, "I'll find the sink!" and headed for the back room. The workroom was so dark that I couldn't find the light switch, so I groped around in the dark until I found the sink. I tried to set the bucket down in the sink, but something was in the way. When I reached down to find out what it was, "My God!" - it was a pair of cold, hairy legs and feet.

By now, my eyes were getting accustomed to the darkness, so I could make out a body laying on a table attached to those hairy legs and feet. I couldn't remember ever being that scared before in all my young life. I grabbed the still-empty bucket and scurried back to the chapel. Now, I knew why poor old Dad was white, green and shaky.

As I entered the chapel, I stuttered out, "Can't find the darn sink, either." Neither one of the big, brave paperhangers would admit to their scary experience or go back there again. We ended up draining the drinking water fountain in the entry hall to get just barely enough water to start the job.

Ted came back downstairs a little later, but too late to save us from our horrible ordeal. We didn't mention the water problem to him at all. More water was needed later in the day, so Ted took the big bucket and said, "Come with me, junior, I want to show you something."

Ted and I entered the workroom, only this time, with all the lights on, which made things a lot less scary. Sure enough, there was an old dead man laying on a table without a bit of cover over him, and his feet were still hanging in the sink. Ted asked, "Junior, pick up that little baby laying on the floor over in the corner and hand it to me."

Now, this was something else again! A dead baby, bluish in color, also uncovered and on a breadboard.

I just had to show this young man how big and brave this paperhanger really was, so I lifted the breadboard up with the baby on it and handed it to Ted. Ted laid the breadboard right on the dead man's stomach and started to work on that tiny, cold body.

Ted said very calmly, "Hey junior, help me hold it so it won't slide off the board."

I did it against all my better, cowardly judgement. I will never forget the feeling of that cold, stiff, little baby. The tiny baby had an incision across its entire midsection and was stitched up with stitches like those used on a potato sack. I asked innocently why such a crude operation and especially about the stitching.

"This six-month-old child died from unknown causes, so an autopsy was performed, and that's how they always close the exploratory incision," Ted explained.

I had to leave Ted just as things were getting interesting to go up front and help my dad finish the paperhanging job before he had a fit.

Just before we had finished the job and it was nearly quitting time, Ted came back to inspect the paperhanging and asked, "You two guys want to see something cute? Come with me."

Dad and I followed Ted to the back room. He had the baby in a tiny casket and it really did look nice. He had done a remarkable job on its face. It looked just like she was sleeping so peacefully. She was beautiful.

After I saw the finished work Ted had done, I felt a little better about an embalmer's job, but still thanked God that I was learning to be a "Dullsville" paperhanger.

A Teenager's Survival Guide

by Joseph Walker

Well, it's finally happened. We have a teenager in the house.

It's not like we didn't expect it, or anything. I mean, we've known for 13 years that it was coming, and we've tried to prepare ourselves. But, it wasn't until I saw Amy talking to that 15-year-old boy at church the other day, when I noticed that he was a little intimidated by her, that I began to fully appreciate what was happening in our lives.

And frankly, I'm a little scared.

Don't get me wrong - Amy is a terrific girl with a strong sense of values. But, she's also imperfect, which means she's going to make mistakes from time to time. And, today, more than ever before, a simple mistake or error in judgement can be devastating to young people - emotionally, physically and spiritually.

And so I've been thinking. At age 13, Amy hasn't quite arrived at the point where she totally tunes Mom and Dad out the minute they start to talk. Maybe now, just as she's beginning her teenage journey, is the time to debunk some of those myths that plagued us all through adolescence to one degree or another. If I could imprint anything on Amy's mind to help see her through the next seven or eight years, it would be that she remember these ten simple truths.

1. Everybody isn't doing it. Whatever "it" is, from drugs to drinking to cheating on tests, there's always someone you admire who isn't doing it because they choose not to. Emulate that someone. Or better yet, be that someone for others.

2. Bad things don't only happen to "bad" kids. You don't have to be looking for trouble to find it. Lots of "good" girls get pregnant. "Good" boys can get in accidents while showing off in Dad's new sports car just as easily as "bad" boys. All it takes is one bad decision and you'll be just as dead - or pregnant or addicted or imprisoned - as the kid who is always "asking for it."

3. The world doesn't owe you a thing. That teacher doesn't have to give you a good grade unless you earn it. Your boss doesn't have to give you a raise unless she feels you deserve it. You'll find that most people make their own breaks. Happiness doesn't just happen. You have to take responsibility for your life, and make it happen.

4. The answers to life's most important questions can't be artificially induced. Although many have tried, nobody that I know of has ever found lasting peace and happiness in a bottle, in a syringe or in the back seat of a car. The headlong pursuit of momentary thrills usually proves to be destructive over the long haul, making it all the more difficult to probe the real source of answers, which is within yourself.

5. You aren't as invincible as you think you are. Is there a junkie alive - or dead, for that matter - who didn't think he would be immune from the strangle hold of addiction? Is there a teenager with a sexually-transmitted disease who didn't figure these things always happen to someone else? And is there a paralyzed teenage driver who, moments before the crash, didn't think they had everything completely under control?

6. Popularity isn't all it's cracked up to be. When it comes right down to it, popularity tends to be about conformity and living your life according to the standards of whatever group happens to be "in" at the moment. It takes a lot of energy to keep up with the group, and there's constant pressure to conform. Why not just live your own life and let people accept you for who you are. You'll be happier - and less stressed.

7. Experience isn't necessarily the best teacher - unless you're going to throw the experiences of others into the equation. You don't have to stick your hand in the fire to know that it's hot. And you don't have to experiment with drugs or premarital sex or anything else, to know they're dangerous. Others have already proven that. Trust them.

8. There's no such thing as "too far gone." No matter how many mistakes you've made, if you sincerely want to change and are willing to pay the price, you can do it.

9. The sun really will come up tomorrow. No matter how bleak things may seem from time to time, they'll get better. Things change. Problems fade away. And those that don't ... well, you'll figure out a way to deal with them. Honest.

10. Somebody does care about you. It may not always be the people you want to care, but there is always someone who is there. In fact, you probably already know who they are, because they're the ones you've always been able to count on. That won't change. No matter what. Not even for a teenager.

Summer Movie Preview

I can't believe it's almost summer already ... I'm still trying to dig all the Easter candy out of my seat cushions. Anyway, summer is just days away, and with summer, comes an avalanche of big-budget, big-star movies. Here's a look.

What About Bob?

Directed by "Muppet-man" Frank Ox ("Dirty Rotten Scoundrels") this Touchstone comedy stars Bill Murray ("Quick Change") as a neurotic "nut case" with an abnormal fixation with his psychiatrist, played by Richard Dreyfus ("Once Around"). The good doctor goes on a family vacation and, unable to cope without daily treatment, Murray decides to follow him. Co-starring is Julie Hagerty ("Lost In America") as the shrink's impatient wife. Release date: May 17

Backdraft

Universal Studios' entry into this season's blockbuster competition, "Backdraft" is loaded with stars Kurt Russell ("Tango and Cash"), William Baldwin ("Flatliners"), Scott Glenn ("the Hunt For Red October"), Jennifer Jason Leigh ("Miami Blues"), Rebecca De Mornay ("Risky Business") and Robert De Niro ("Goodfellas") appear in the first motion picture to deal with the struggles of firefighters. Filmed under the direction of Ron Howard ("Parenthood"), and with the full cooperation of the Chicago Fire Department, this should be a good one.

Release date: May 24.

Robin Hood: Prince of Thieves

I really want to see this movie, but, I don't know ... Kevin Costner as Robin Hood? I think the legendary outlaw really needs an English accent to be credible. Anyway, co-starring with Costner is Morgan Freeman ("Driving Miss Daisy") as the Saracen wise-man, Azeem, Alan Rickman ("Die Hard") as the Sheriff of Nottingham, Christian Slater ("Heathers") as Will Scarlett and Mary Elizabeth Mastrantonio ("Class Action") as Maid Marian. Most interesting about the production is the $1 million+ Warner Brothers paid Sean Connery to make a brief appearance at the end of the movie. I think it comes down to about $250,000 per spoken line ... must be nice.

Release date: June 14.

The Rocketeer

Set in the aviation community of Los Angeles in 1938, this Walt Disney adventure follows pilot Cliff Secord (Bill Campbell) on his crime-fighting adventures.

O'Neill comedy at Theatre East

The Grossmont College theatre arts department presents, "Ah, Wilderness!" at Theatre East May 16-18 and 22-25. The Eugene O'Neill comedy classic is set in small-town America in the early 1900s. For show times, cost and additional information call the Theatre East box office at 440-2277.

Secord discovers an experimental rocket pack which gives him the ability to fly, and he soon finds himself in a struggle against an evil dictator who plans to take over the world. Also starring is Alan Arkin ("Havana"), Paul Sorvino ("Goodfellas"), Timothy Dalton (the new James Bond) and my most recent favorite Hollywood babe, Jennifer Connelly ("Career Opportunities").

Release date: June 21

Billy Bathgate

Continuing Hollywood's love affair with gangsterism, Touchstone Pictures presents Academy Award winner Dustin Hoffman ("Rain Man") and Bruce Willis ("Die Hard") in a drama set against the underworld of 1935 New York. Hoffman is the notorious Dutch Schultz who takes young Bathgate (Loren Dean) under his wing. Billy moves up from janitor to confidante and eventually fulfills his own ambitions for wealth, luxury and love.

Release date: June 28.

Mom and Dad Save the World

Written by the lunatics responsible for "Bill and Ted's Excellent Adventure," this science-fiction comedy stars Jon Levitz ("Saturday Night Live") as the Emperor of the planet Spengo, who plans to destroy the Earth. But before the "big bang," he spies on one earthling who sets his heart on fire - Marge Nelson (Teri Garr), housewife extraordinaire, Marge and her husband, Dick (the under-appreciated Jeffrey Jones of "Ferris Bueller's Day Off" and "The Hunt for Red October") discover that with middle-class common sense they can save Earth, solve extra-terrestrial love spats and escape their own death. Also starring is Monty Python's Eric Idle and Sports Illustrated swim suit model, Cathy Ireland.

To be released in late summer.

The Naked Gun 2 1/2: The Smell of Fear

Lt. Frank Drebin (Leslie Nielsen) returns in the sequel to the original from Jerry and David Zucker. Part One was hilarious, so what did they do for an encore? "This time, we decided to try to explore the rich underpinnings of these characters' emotions and motivations," says producer Bob Weiss, "then, we figured, ah, the hell with it."

Release date: June 28

Life Stinks

Mel Brooks stars as a greedy billionaire who spends 30 days in a Los Angeles slum to win a bet. Leslie Ann Warren co-stars as the feisty bag lady who deflates his arrogance and wins his heart.

Written and directed by Brooks, "Life Stinks" has a good shot at hilarity.

Release date: sometime in July

Also in the works ... Arnold is back in "Terminator 2," Disney re-releases "101 Dalmatians," Bill and Ted have another "Excellent Adventure," and Rodney Dangerfield gets animated ... literally.

Helix Happenings

by Kristina Ruiz-Healy

The Helix High School book sale, which took place in April, was a grand success. The money earned will be used to replace the very old microfiche reader/printer and for updating reference books.

A "big thanks" for a much-needed donation. The La Mesa Community Welfare Association donated $1,200 to the Helix High School library to help update the Contemporary Literary Criticism. Their donation allowed Helix to add 14 new volumes to the library's collection.

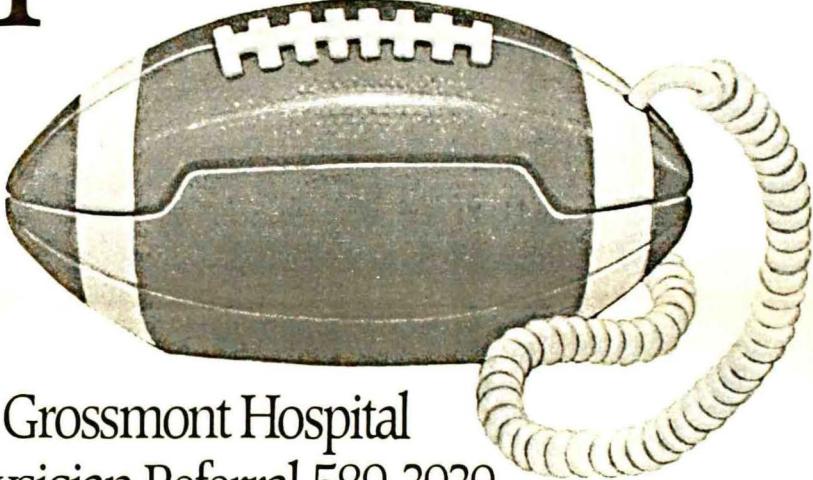

Old Globe Arts Award:

Congratulations to Jolie Mounts on receiving the Old Globe Outstanding Senior Language Arts Award for leadership, academics and performance skills. This award was given for composition, drama performances and speech competitions. Mari Mann was selected as her mentor teacher and will be recognized by the Old Globe, as well.

Congratulations to Helix Orchestra members Candi Surratt, Morgan Wheeler, Jean Lax, Taunya Peters, Cathy Brown, Jonathan Mesimer and Matt Bell for their performance with the Grossmont District Orchestra.

They performed at the Heritage Festival in Fullerton, with groups from all over the southwestern United States. They were rated as "Outstanding Instrumental Ensemble." Way to go, Scotties!

The Helix High School Choral Pops concert will take place May 29 through June 1. The performance will feature choral department's glee, choir and ensemble. Come experience the "better than ever" performance with a redesigned stage, computerized lighting effects, video projections, multi-screen images and a live band as well as excellent choreography.
